This'll Kill You

FOR 50 CENTS you can get from the U. S. Government Printing Office in Washington a booklet put out by the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee dealing with espionage, Soviet style. It makes fiction a pallid imitator of life.

It is based on the disclosures of two former Russian intelligence agents who defected to the West. It deals with the operations of an organization known as SMERSH. The word sounds like an after-dinner cordial favored by the "in" set, but actually SMERSH went in for such pastimes as murder, kidnaping and drugs to make victims talk. An interesting item is a death spray, emitted from a slim tube about 7 inches long.

So what you read and see on TV, and the movies is not bottled in Bond after all. If legally possible, the Government could add a few hundred grand or so to its income by charging a fat fee for use of the material on the screen or the air.
